DAN SMOOT

SECOND ROLL CALLS, 1965

In the May 31, 1965 Report ("First Roll Calls, 1965"), we tabulated 14 roll call votes in the national Congress (7 in the House, 7 in the Senate) during the first two months of this year. Herein, we tabulate 14 more roll calls (7 in the House, 7 in the Senate) taken during March, April, and May.

As a whole, Congress is little more than an echo chamber for administration propaganda, a rubber stamp for the President.

The Senate is worse than the House. There were 30 U. S. Representatives who maintained 100% conservative voting on the first 14 roll calls tabulated in this Report. No Senator had a 100% rating. Only seven Senators (four Republicans and three Democrats) had conservative ratings of 80% or better: Carl T. Curtis and Roman L. Hruska, Nebraska Republicans; Milward L. Simpson, Wyoming Republican; Strom Thurmond, South Carolina Republican; Harry Flood Byrd and A. Willis Robertson, Virginia Democrats; and James O. Eastland, Mississippi Democrat.

Disarmament Agency Funds

On February 17, 1965, the House passed HR 2998, authorizing $40,000,000 for the U. S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency during the three-year period ending with the 1968 fiscal year (see "First Roll Calls, 1965").

On March 10, 1965, the Senate, by a stand of 83 to 12, passed an amended version of HR 2998, reducing the Disarmament Agency's fund to $20,000,000 for two fiscal years — thus keeping expenditures at the $10,000,000-a-year level established when the Agency was created in 1961.

On April 13, 1965, the House, by a stand of 328 to 77, passed a compromise conference version of HR 2998, authorizing $10,000,000 a year for the Disarmament Agency during the next three fiscal years.

U. S. Representative H. R. Gross (Iowa Republican) calls the Disarmament Agency a "wanton waste of the taxpayers' money." It is worse than that. It is an agency to promote unilateral disarmament of the United States and eventual surrender of our armed forces to international control.

The Senate March 10, 1965, vote on Disarmament Agency funds is recorded in Column 8, under Senate. The House April 13, 1965, vote is recorded in Column 14, under House. In both places, C indicates a conservative stand against funds for the Agency.

Manpower Development and Training Act

In March, 1962, Congress passed the Manpower Development and Training Act. In defiance of constitutional limitations, this law authorized the Secretary of Labor to decide the number of Americans who should be working in any industry at any given time and place; and to allocate taxpayers' money for training youth in fields which the Secretary of Labor decides they should be trained in.

President Kennedy and other sponsors of the legislation said it would provide "vocational training and on-the-job training" for an estimated 410,000 American workers burdened with "obsolete and insufficient skills." The program was supposed to last two years, and cost $262,375,000. By the end of 1964, it had cost $425,874,233; 60,000 individuals had completed job retraining; another 135,000 were in training.

On February 1, 1965, President Johnson asked Congress to expand and extend the Manpower Development Training Act of 1962. To justify the request, the President presented a dreary picture of unemployment and untrained workers. Evidently, the unconstitutional spending of $425,874,233 in less than two years had not improved conditions which President Kennedy had described as justification for initiating the Manpower Development and Training program.

Yet, Congress quickly complied with President Johnson's request to pour out more tax money on a program which was already a failure. On March 16, 1965, the Senate, by a stand of 90 to 8, passed S 974, extending the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 for five more years — authorizing $454,000,000 for the 1966 fiscal year, placing no limit on authorizations for subsequent years. On April 1, the House, by voice vote, passed a somewhat different version of the bill. Senate and House agreed on a conference version, which was passed by voice votes. On April 26, 1965, the President signed into law (PL 89-15) the 1965 expansion and extension of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962.

The roll call vote taken in the Senate on March 16, 1965, is recorded in Column 9 under Senate — C being a conservative stand against extending the program.

Federal Aid To Education

On March 26, 1965, the House, by a stand of 268 to 158, passed the Education Act of 1965 (HR 2362). The Senate passed the bill on April 9, by a stand of 78 to 20. The President signed it into law (PL 89-10) on April 11.

Involving multi-billion-dollar expenditures of federal tax money, the aid to education program is considered a major front in the President's war on poverty. Tax money used in this war is financing a scandal of vast proportions. Politicians and political factions, particularly in large cities, are fighting for control of the spending — using tax money for political purposes. For example, U. S. Representative Adam Clayton Powell (Harlem Democrat) has allegedly won a contest with Sargent Shriver for control of anti-poverty money to be spent in New York City. Franklin Roosevelt, Jr. is said to be using his job as head of the new Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to improve his chances for winning the governorship of New York in 1966.

During debates on the Education Act of 1965, Senator Peter H. Dominick (Colorado Republican) proposed a means to check some of the political corruption which flourishes in the war on poverty. Senator Dominick wanted to prevent the granting of federal aid-to-education money directly to local agencies without approval of state governments. This would have handicapped big-city political machines in their scandalous lobbying for direct grants of federal tax money; but the Senate, by a stand of 55 to 41, rejected the Dominick proposal.

Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr. (North Carolina Democrat) wanted to require the U. S. Commissioner of Education to give notice 30 days prior to disbursement of federal aid-to-education funds — so that any individual could bring suit challenging the constitutionality of the proposed disbursement. By a stand of 59 to 39, the Senate rejected the Ervin proposal.

The defeated Dominick and Ervin amendments would not have made the Education Act of 1965 constitutional, but would have eliminated some outrageous features. Note how many Senators cast conservative votes for the amendments, but then cast liberal votes for the unconstitutional Act after the amendments were rejected.

Roll calls on passage of the Education Act of 1965 are tabulated in Column 10 under Senate and in Column 12 under House — C indicating a conservative stand against the Act.

Senate roll call on the defeated Dominick amendment to the Education Act of 1965 is recorded in Column 11 under Senate — C indicating a conservative stand for this effort to eliminate political corruption from the aid-to-education program.

Senate roll call on the defeated Ervin amendment is recorded in Column 12 under Senate — C indicating a conservative vote for the amendment.

As passed, the Education Act of 1965 authorized:

(1) $1.06 billion for special aid-to-education in school districts with large numbers of children whose families have incomes of less than $2,000 a year;

(2) $100 million first-year expenditure on a five-year program of grants to buy textbooks and library books for elementary and secondary schools;

(3) $100 million first-year expenditure on a five-year program of grants to community-wide centers which will establish model school programs and provide educational services not being provided by existing schools;

(4) a $100 million, five-year program of grants for improving educational research, training research personnel, constructing new research centers;

(5) $10 million first-year expenditure on a five-year program of grants to strengthen state departments of education.

Within 30 days after President Johnson signed the Education Act of 1965, federal education officials were overwhelmed by the task of processing "compliance plans" submitted from 26,000 school districts and 50 state departments of education. This alone gives the lie to insistent liberal propaganda that federal aid does not mean federal control.

Voting Rights Bill

The pending voting rights bill (S 1564) has a provision called the automatic trigger—making automatic the appointment of federal examiners to supervise elections in states (or subdivisions of states) where the Justice Department alleges that fewer than 25 percent of voting-age adults are registered. This would give the U. S. Attorney General authority to meddle, unconstitutionally, in any election. Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr., proposed an amendment which, though it would not have made the voting rights bill constitutional, would have given states some chance to defend themselves against charges of voter discrimination before federal intervention. Ervin proposed that federal examiners not be appointed until after a federal district court (in the area involved) made a judicial finding.

On May 6, 1965, the Senate, by a stand of 71 to 26, rejected the Ervin amendment. The vote is recorded in Column 13 under Senate, C indicating a vote for the defeated amendment.

On May 11, 1965, the Senate, by a stand of 52 to 48, rejected a "liberal" amendment to the voting rights bill — the amendment (sponsored by Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Massachusetts Democrat) to outlaw poll taxes as a requirement in state and local elections. This vote is recorded in Column 14 under Senate, C being a conservative stand against the anti-poll tax proposal.

For more information on the voting rights bill, see this Report, May 10, 1965.

HCUA Funds

On February 25, 1965, the House, by a stand of 363 to 32, voted funds to continue the House Committee on Un-American Activities. It is obvious that many liberals, who dislike the anti-communist work of the HCUA, vote funds for the committee, because they know it is popular with the public. The vote is recorded (in Column 8 under House) to show the 32 hard-core liberals who identify themselves with a cause widely known to be a primary goal of the communist party — abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Note that Adam Clayton Powell avoids taking a stand on the question of voting funds for the HCUA — whose files reveal that Powell has many associations with communist activities.

Appalachia Act

In February, the Senate approved the wasteful, harmful, unconstitutional Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 (vote tabulated in "First Roll Calls, 1965"). The House, by a stand of 262 to 170, passed the bill on March 3, 1965. This vote is tabulated in Column 9 under House, C indicating a conservative stand against.

National Council of Arts

See page 243

Government control of the arts is an essential and conspicuous feature of communist societies. Now, our own government, in the hands of totalitarian liberals, moves craftily toward control of the arts — under guise of promoting art, insistently denying that federal aid will bring federal control, ignoring the fact that any kind of federal activity in the arts is unconstitutional.

In 1964, Congress created a National Council of Arts (composed of 25 members, appointed by the President). Its purpose was vague. Apparently, liberals intended it merely as a door opener — to get the federal government involved in the arts, intending to legislate deeper involvement later.

On March 15, 1965, the House voted on HR 4714, an administration-sponsored bill to provide $150,000 a year to operate the National Council of Arts. Administration forces tried to achieve passage of HR 4714 under suspension of rules. Under suspension of rules, a bill can be passed without any debate or discussion, but passage requires two-thirds of all votes cast, rather than a simple majority. The administration maneuver failed: 223 Representatives voted for HR 4714 on March 15; only 116 voted against; but the bill did not pass because the yea vote was not two-thirds of the total. This vote is recorded in Column 10 under House, C indicating a conservative stand against funds for the National Council of Arts.

Washington, D. C., Crime Bill

In August, 1963, the House passed the District of Columbia Omnibus Crime Bill (HR 7525) which, among other things, nullified the rule of evidence established by the U. S. Supreme Court in the Mallory case, and the rule of evidence established by a U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the Durham case.

The Mallory case involved Andrew R. Mallory, a 19-year-old negro, who confessed to raping a woman in the basement of her apartment house in Washington. He was tried and convicted in District Court. His conviction was upheld in the Court of Appeals. Without suggesting any doubt of guilt or suspicion of police brutality, the Supreme Court set Mallory free to go unpunished for his crime, solely because police had questioned him before formal arraignment. The decision established a rule of evidence which means, in effect, that police cannot question a suspect before he is formally arrested and arraigned unless the suspect agrees. After formal arrest, he cannot be questioned at all.

In the Durham case, a U. S. Court of Appeals established a rule of evidence which makes virtually impossible successful criminal prosecution of anyone who pleads momentary insanity or mental incompetence. Kennedy administration liberals, who strongly opposed the District of Columbia Omnibus Crime Bill of 1963, supported the Durham case rule with the astonishing argument that an individual who may intellectually know he is committing a crime, but lacks emotional capacity to refrain from committing it, is not really guilty of crime.

The Kennedy administration, and its liberal supporters in Congress, could not keep the House from passing the D. C. Crime Bill in 1963; but the bill died because the Senate refused to take action during 1963 and 1964.

On March 22, 1965, the House, by a stand of 262 to 141, passed HR 5688, another District of Columbia Crime Bill to nullify the Mallory and Durham rules of evidence. The vote is recorded in Column 11 under House, C indicating a conservative stand for the bill.

The Johnson administration Justice Department is opposed to HR 5688, just as the Kennedy administration was opposed to HR 7525 in 1963. The Senate has not yet taken action on the bill.

Medicare

On April 8, 1965, the House, by a vote of 313 to 115, passed the medicare bill (HR 6675), adding medical care benefits to social security, expanding present benefits, increasing social security taxes.

It is estimated that HR 6675 will add six billion dollars to the cost of social security during the first year. There are no reliable estimates on how much HR 6675 will add to the annual cost, and deficits, of the social security system in subsequent years. Without medicare, the social security system is already bankrupt: paying out more than it takes in, building no reserve to meet ever-growing obligations for the future. In the eight-year period 1957-1964, social security disbursements averaged 11.3 billion dollars a year, while collections averaged 10.8 billion a year — leaving an annual average deficit of about 500 million dollars. For a historical review, and current analysis, of the social security system, see "Social Security," the March 1, 1965, issue of this Report.

The vote on medicare is recorded in Column 13 under House, C indicating a conservative vote against.
